	SECTION A : READING SKILLS (22 marks)
1	Read the text carefully and answer the questions: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. One night about five years ago, just before bed, I saw a tweet from a friend announcing how delighted he was to have been shortlisted for a journalism award. I felt my stomach lurch and my head spin, my teeth clench and my chest tighten. I did not sleep until morning. 2. Another five - years or so before that, when I was at university, I was scrolling through the Facebook photos of someone on my course whom I vaguely knew. As I clicked on the pictures of her out clubbing with friends, drunkenly laughing, I felt my mood sink so fast I had to sit back in my chair. I seemed to stop breathing. 3. I have thought about why these memories still haunt me from time to time. Why they have not been forgotten along with most other day - to - day interactions I have had on social media - and I think it is because,... I so desperately wanted what those people had that it left me as winded as if I had been punched in the stomach. 4. We live in the age of envy. Human beings have always felt what Aristotle defined in the fourth century BC as pain at the sight of another's good fortune, stirred by "those who have what we ought to have" - though it would be another thousand years before it would make it on to Pope Gregory's list of the seven deadly sins. 5. But with the advent of social media, says Ethan Kross, professor of psychology at the University of Michigan who studies the impact of Facebook on our wellbeing, "envy is being taken to an extreme". We are constantly bombarded by "Photoshopped lives", he says, "and that exerts a toll on us the likes of which we have never experienced in the history of our species. And it is not particularly pleasant." 6. While envying other people is damaging enough, we have something even more pernicious. We look at the lives we have constructed online in which we only show the best of ourselves, and we feel a fear of missing out in relation to our own lives. We don't measure up to the lives we tell others we are living, and we look at the self as though it were an other, and feel envious of it. This creates an alienating sense of "self - envy" inside us. 7. There is a different, even darker definition of the concept of envy. For Patricia Polledri, psychoanalytic psychotherapist and author of Envy in Everyday Life, the word refers to something quite dangerous, which can take the form of emotional abuse and violent acts of criminality. "Envy is wanting to destroy what someone else has. Not just wanting it for yourself, but wanting other people not to have it. It's a deep rooted issue, where you are very, very resentful of another person's wellbeing". 	[12]

	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> The author felt her stomach lurch and her chest tighten. She could not sleep until the morning. The main reason behind this was: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> her excess involvement in social media her envy for her friend's achievement her haunting memories of childhood her deteriorating health conditions Why do people get envious of others? Give any two reasons. The social media platforms: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> do not influence our nature in a significant manner act as stabilisers for our envious nature act as amplifiers for our envious nature help to control jealousy for others Aristotle's observations about human nature have passed the test of time. Give an argument in favour of the above statement. The advent of social media in our lives has affected human nature in a certain way. Explain briefly in 30 - 40 words. Select the option that lists the most dangerous form of envy. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Alienating sense of self - envy Longing for the luxurious lifestyle Desiring what other people have Wanting to destroy what others have Complete the following analogy: Drunkenly : Soberly : : _____ : Clearly Complete the following sentence: bombarded by photoshopped lives.
